Vasectomy is the only permanent method of male contraception, chosen by an estimated 13% of Irish men.

Marie Stopes Reproductive Choices has a wealth of experience in providing vasectomy and has seen thousands of men for this service.

This booklet aims to answer some common questions that you may have about vasectomy.

If you are thinking of having a vasectomy we hope this will give you the information you need to make a decision.

If there is anything else you want to know then please feel free to call us on (01) 830 0630 - 24 hours or visit www.reproductivechoices.ie

What is a vasectomy?

Vasectomy is a permanent method of male contraception. It is a simple surgical procedure that seals the sperm-carrying tubes (the vas deferens) to prevent sperm from entering the fluid you ejaculate. The procedure usually takes just 20 minutes.

Why choose vasectomy?

The main reasons men choose to have a vasectomy are that either they have completed their family and have decided to take permanent responsibility for contraception, or in some cases, may not wish to have children at all.

“ This was an excellent experience given that I felt naturally apprehensive before it. The team, especially in the treatment room, put me at ease. ”

Vasectomy – the right decision for you?

Even if you are sure that you want to have a vasectomy, you are bound to have questions and possibly some concerns.

Before choosing a vasectomy you need to be absolutely sure it is the right choice for you, as a vasectomy cannot be easily reversed.

Only you can decide whether or not to have a vasectomy. You do not need your partner's agreement and our service is completely confidential.

However, if you are in a long-term relationship, we would advise that you discuss such an important decision with your partner. We will not inform anyone, including your GP, without your permission.

You will see a counsellor at the clinic to talk everything through before the procedure. If you have any questions before then call (01) 830 0630.

We will not refuse anyone on the grounds of age or marital status. However, younger men may wish to have a discussion with an experienced advisor to ensure that this is the right decision for them.

Is a vasectomy 100% effective?

Both vasectomy and female sterilisation are the most effective long-term methods of contraception. However, there is a very small possibility of failure, less than 1%, with either method. With regard to vasectomy this can be categorised as short-term or long-term failure.

The vasectomy procedure involves sealing the sperm-carrying tubes but, in rare cases, the tubes may join together naturally:

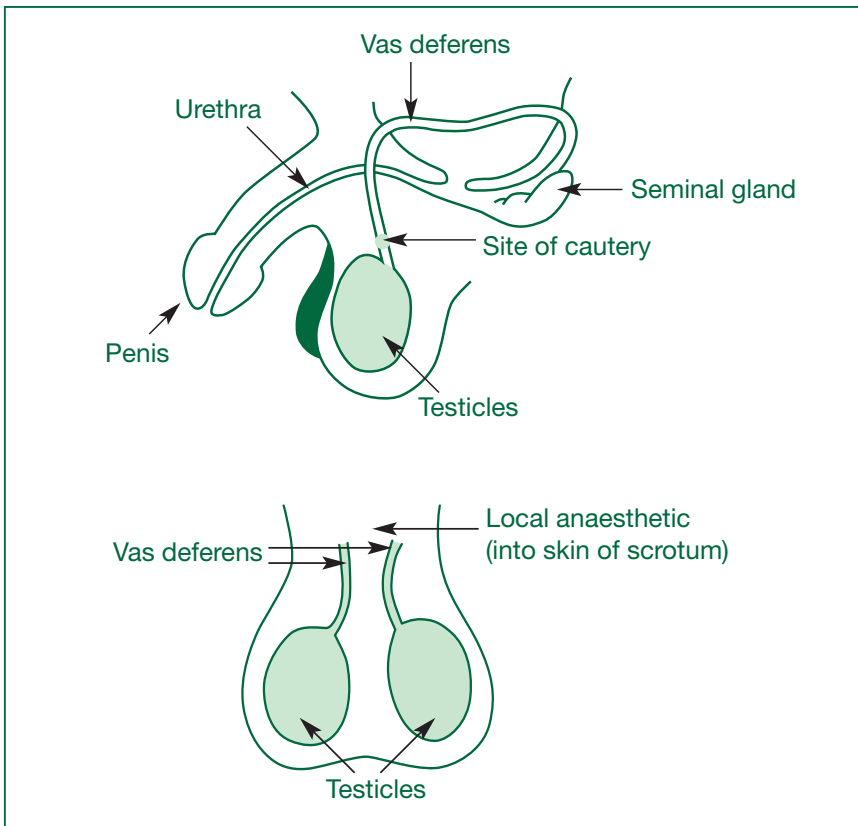

Short-term failure: Should semen tests carried out following the procedure demonstrate a consistent pattern of positive results, it has to be assumed that healing has taken place and a repeat procedure may be advised, which would be carried out at no extra cost.

Long-term failure: It is possible, although very rare (less than 1%) for the tubes to rejoin years after a vasectomy. Unfortunately, there is no way of predicting this in advance and the only warning sign will be an accidental pregnancy. For additional peace of mind we are able to provide yearly semen testing for a very small charge.

How is a vasectomy performed?

The sperm carrying tubes are called the vas deferens and these tubes come from a man's testicles. When a vasectomy is performed the vas deferens are sealed to stop sperm getting through. This does not affect the ejaculate fluid as this comes from a different area called the seminal gland. At Marie Stopes Reproductive Choices a fast acting local anaesthetic is given, which quickly numbs the area. The incision to locate the vas deferens is very tiny and no scalpel or stitches are needed, except in very rare cases. The vasectomy procedure takes about 20 minutes to perform.

After a vasectomy the testicles will continue to produce sperm as normal, but it cannot enter the tubes and is simply reabsorbed into the body.

Is a vasectomy effective straight away?

No, as there will be some sperm left in your tubes after the procedure and you will still need to use another method of contraception for three to four months until the tubes have cleared.

We will ask you to provide sperm samples at specified times after the procedure, which we will test to check if there are sperm still present.

When you have given two consecutive samples in a row that are both free from sperm we will write and inform you that your vasectomy has been successful and that you can stop using contraception, however in some cases, this can take several tests.

Vasectomy and your health

Vasectomy is a very common and safe procedure and most men recover very quickly and go back to work after a period of rest. Any complications are very rare.

When booking your appointment we will ask you a few questions about your medical history and any medication you are taking. For example, we need to know if you have had any previous surgery on your testicles or a hernia repair. Scar tissue from these procedures may make the procedure a little more complicated to perform.

There is no firm evidence linking vasectomy to cancer of the prostate or testicles. However we advise all men, whether or not they have had a vasectomy, to undergo regular health screening. It is also important to get into the habit of regularly checking your testicles for lumps.

A very small number of men have been known to experience long term testicular pain following a vasectomy, which may require follow-up treatment. However, we stress that we have seen very few cases of this kind.

Vasectomy and your sex life

Some men naturally worry that a vasectomy will affect their enjoyment of sex. Having a vasectomy has no effect on your hormones, orgasm or ejaculation, so there is no reason why a vasectomy should have a negative impact on your sex life.

In fact, many couples say they enjoy sex more afterwards as they can be completely spontaneous without worrying about an unintended pregnancy.

The fluid you ejaculate will look exactly the same; the only difference will be there are no sperm in it.

“ It took me a while to decide to have a vasectomy but I can honestly say I’ve never once regretted it. ”

How much does it cost?

Details of our current fees can be found at www.reproductivechoices.ie and in our booking form. When you book your appointment you will be asked to pay a deposit. The balance of the fee will be payable when you arrive at the centre.
